Zombie sniper hunter 2 the last apocalypse warriors

Check out the latest post posted by Ali S. Khan Walking Dead fans on May 16, 2011: there are all sorts of emergencies we can prepare for. Take the zombie apocalypse, for example. That's right, I said z-o-m-b-i-e a-p-o-c-a-l-y-p-s-e. You can laugh now, but you will be happy to read this, and hey, maybe you can even learn a thing or two about how to prepare for a real emergency. A brief history of zombies We've all seen at least one movie about flesh-eating zombies taking over (my personal favorite is Resident Evil), but where do zombies come from, and why do they love eating so many brains? The word zombie comes from the origins of haiti and the New Orleans pier. Its meaning has changed slightly over the years, but it means a mysteriously re-animated human body to provide the undead. Ancient piets and traditions of folk legends have created shows such as The Walking Dead. Couple dressed as zombies - Danny Zucco and Sandy Olsen walk on the annual Toronto Zombie Walk in the movie Grease. In movies, shows and literature, zombies are often described as being produced by infectious viruses that are transmitted through contact with bitten bodily fluids. Harvard psychiatrist Steven Schlossmann writes a (fictional) medical paper on zombies presented on The Night of the Living Dead and means the condition as Ataxic neurodegenerative portil deficiency syndrome triggered by infectious agents. The Zombie Survival Guide identifies the cause of zombies with a virus called Solanum. Other zombie origins shown in the film include radiation from destroyed NASA Venus probes (like Night of the Living Dead), as well as mutations in pre-existing conditions such as prion, bwangwoo disease, measles and rabies. The rise of zombies in popular culture has given icing to the idea that a zombie apocalypse can happen. In these scenarios, zombies will take over the entire country and eat around the city streets living their way. The spread of this idea has led many to wonder how do you prepare for the zombie apocalypse? Well, we're here to answer that question for you, hopefully share some tips on getting ready for a real emergency too! Some of the supplies for your emergency kit are safer than sorry so what do you do before zombies... For example, does a hurricane or epidemic actually occur? First of all, you should have an emergency kit in your house. This includes things like water, food and other supplies that can get you for a few days before you can find a zombie-free refugee camp (or in case of a natural disaster, it will buy you some time until you can make your way to an evacuation shelter or utility line). Here are some topics that you should include in your kit for the full list to visit the CDC emergency page: Water (1 gallon per person) food (stocked in non-perishable items eaten regularly) drugs (including prescriptions) Non-defense drugs) tools and consumables (utility knives, duct tape, battery-powered radios, etc.) hygiene and hygiene (household bleach, soap, towels, etc.) clothing and bedding (changes in clothes for each family member and blanket) important documents (copies of driver's licenses, Passports, copies of birth certificates to name a few) and first aid supplies (you are a goner if a zombie bites you, but you can use them to treat the basic wounds and scratches you can get during your tornado or hurricane) After you have made your emergency kit, after you have made your emergency kit, and after you have arranged your emergency kit, you will have to arrange your emergency kit, you must arrive with your emergency kit, and after you have arranged an emergency kit with your family. This includes where to go and who to call if zombies start appearing outside the door steps. You can also implement this plan if there is a flood, earthquake, or other emergency. Family members have a meeting with their mailboxes. You need to choose two meeting places, one close to home, and more far away from your home to identify the type of emergency that is possible in your area. In addition to zombie apocalypse, it can include floods, tornadoes, or earthquakes. If you're not sure, contact your local Red Cross president for more information. Choose a meeting place for your family to regroup even if zombies invade your home... Alternatively, the town is evacuated due to a hurricane. Choose one place just outside your home for a sudden emergency and one place outside your neighborhood if you can't return home immediately. Identify emergency contacts. Check out a list of local contacts such as police, fire departments and local zombie response teams. They also call in an emergency to identify out-of-state contacts who know the rest of the family is ok. Plan evacuation routes. When zombies are hungry, they won't stop until they get food (i.e. brains). Plan multiple routes to take in advance so you don't have a chance where to go and flesh eaters! This is also helpful when you need to make natural disasters and shelter quickly. Never be afraid - the CDC gets the kit ready, confirms the plan, and if zombies started roaming the streets, the CDC will conduct an investigation just like any other disease outbreak. The CDC will provide technical assistance to city, state, or international partners dealing with zombie infections. This support can include counseling, laboratory testing and analysis, patient care and treatment, contact tracking, and infection control (including isolation and isolation). Investigations in this scenario are likely to try to achieve several goals: determining the cause of the disease, the cause of infection/virus/toxin, how it is transmitted, how easily it spreads, how to break the transmission cycle and prevent further cases, and how patients can best treat it. Scientists are working to determine the causes and treatments of zombie outbreaks, as well as cdc and other federal causes. We will send medical teams and first aid to help those in the affected areas (I will serve young unnamed disease detective resources for field work). To learn more about what the CDC does to prepare and respond to all kinds of emergencies, join the CDC Zombie Task Force to learn more about how you can prepare and stay safe during an emergency visit to The CDC Foundation, a non-profit partner of the CDC, is offering zombie task force T-shirts (click on the photo for more information). Proceeds go to benefit disaster relief efforts and other important health programs. Get yours before they disappear... Ready? Tell us... Have you started preparing for the zombie apocalypse?
